Student Success Community College Survey of Student Engagement (CCSSE) results	Joe Montgomery <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • Trying to close the loop, and have made progress since 2008. Overall, results from the CCSSE showed CBC performing about average in comparison to other-medium size colleges. The five key benchmarks or areas of student learning (active and collaborative learning, student effort, academic challenge, student-faculty interaction and support for learners), showed a small range from above to below average performance, but collectively falling close to the average. There were some individual survey items that showed a statistically significance difference in means between the CBC and comparison cohort means. These may be areas for further review and creation of appropriate action steps. Despite mostly average performance in CBC’s 2013 results, CBC has shown significant improvement in four of five benchmarks from 2008 to 2013. • The Community College Survey of Student Engagement (CCSSE) is a nationally normed survey developed by the University of Texas at Austin. The 2013 CCSSE cohort includes 718 community colleges from 48 states, the District of Columbia, three Canadian provinces, Bermuda, Micronesia and the Northern Marianas. The survey was developed based research findings that validated the relationship between student engagement and student outcomes. CBC had 717 respondents for this year’s survey. • Scores for each benchmark: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> ○ Active and Collaborative Learning – Overall performance: Below average ○ Student Effort – Overall performance: Average ○ Academic Challenge – Overall performance: Above average ○ Student-Faculty Interaction – Overall performance: Below average ○ Support for Learners – Overall performance: Average Conclusion <ul style="list-style-type: none"> • The 2013 CCSSE results showed CBC performing similarly to other medium-size colleges as well as making significant improvements from 2008. • Given that the raw survey data is available, additional analyses with breakdowns by

Human Development 101 evaluation	various demographic variables can also be performed and can be included in the appropriate Monitoring Reports for the 2013/14 academic year. Current plans are to administer the CCSSE survey again in three years. Joe Montgomery <ul style="list-style-type: none"> In fall of 2012 Human Development 199 (Hdev) was piloted to students who scored below college-level on two or more areas of the COMPASS. Students who took this course, as well as three other cohorts, were tracked on quarter grade point averages and retention rates from fall through spring. Due to limited capacity, there were a number of students who were 'eligible' to take Hdev in fall 2012 but who were not able to enroll in the course in the fall. This group (eligible, but didn't take the course) made up a control group labeled the "comparison cohort." Two other control groups included a 2011 comparison group and a college-level group. The 2011 cohort consisted of students who scored below college-level on two or more areas of the COMPASS in 2011 and began attending CBC in fall 2011. The college-level cohort included students who scored at college-level in two or more areas of the COMPASS and enrolled at CBC in fall 2012. Results <ul style="list-style-type: none"> The Hdev cohort showed higher retention rates than did the comparison cohort and the 2011 cohort for both winter and spring quarters. The Hdev cohort's retention rates of 88.5% for winter quarter was approximately 17 percentage points higher than that for the Comparison group and 13 percentage points higher than the 2011 Comparison group for winter quarter. Winter retention for the Hdev cohort was only about 1.2 percentage points below that of the College-level comparison group. For spring quarter, the 76.9% retention rate for the Hdev cohort was about 15 percentage points higher than the Comparison group and 11 percentage points higher than the 2011 Comparison group. Spring retention for the Hdev cohort was about 4.3 percentage points higher than that of the College-level cohort. The Hdev cohort showed somewhat less positive results in terms of quarter GPAs. In fall quarter the Hdev cohort had slightly higher grades than both the Comparison cohort and the 2011 Comparison cohort, but about 0.38 of a grade point below the College-level comparison group. For winter quarter, the mean GPAs for the Hdev cohort were about the same as the Comparison control group, slightly higher than the 2011 Comparison group, and about 0.44 grade points below the College-level comparison group. For spring quarter, the Hdev cohort GPAs were slightly lower than the Comparison control group, slightly higher than the 2011 Comparison group, and about 0.48 grade points below the College-level group. Conclusion <ul style="list-style-type: none"> The Human Development 199 pilot course demonstrated promising results in terms of improving retention rates, as shown by comparisons with same-year and a previous-year control groups. The Hdev course did not show similar positive impacts on quarter GPAs, however. Additional data available from student evaluation surveys indicated that students were highly satisfied with the Hdev courses and generally recommended that the course be required of all new students. Institutional Research needs to examine the student survey findings in more detail and to expand the study to include
